

Henry Ford Says Rules of Life Few and Simple

The following is part of an editorial in Henry Ford's paper, the Dearborn Independent:

At the end of a recent biography the subject tried to sum up what he had learned from life, and he was able to say it all in a half-dozen simple sentences. There was nothing startling in it. Nothing that would evoke a thrill. But anyone who knows the experience of knowing a simple truth, and seeing how the apparently simple thing runs regnantly through all the planes of life—anyone having this experience will know how thrillingly real such knowledge can be. It is not that the intellectual conception is new but the realization is new and vivid. It is like old familiar things seen under a light that penetrates and glorifies them.

The purpose of life seems to be the accumulation of experience, and the greatest experience of all is to get vividly and realistically inside a principle.

Perhaps this explains why people, as a rule are impatient of the things they are merely told. It may explain the half-contempt of the boy for his father's counsel. It is happening in the world every day that full-grown men are suddenly exclaiming: "My father used to tell me that! By George the old man was right!" But the discovery is not made until the grown son has entered the serviceable temple of truth through the homely door of experience. And he will try in turn to tell his son, but his son may be stubborn, too, and have to learn in the same belated way.

Of course, some people do learn by merely being told. The instant they hear the principle proclaimed they have no need of proof or any kind of confirmation, they just instantly know it is true. It is as if they had known it before, but had forgotten, and the spoken word called to life again an element that was already there.

What Makes People Good-Looking.

A visitor at the recent meeting of the General Assembly of the Northern Presbyterian church studied a group of missionaries lined up on the platform. She said afterwards: "They are all good-looking. There were two old men who looked like they might be two of the apostles." "Well," said another, "thinking pure thoughts and doing unselfish things make their mark on their faces. Pure thinking and good deeds are better than any beauty lotions." How true! "Pretty are those who pretty do." But a good many people do not seem to know this.

"BILLY, HE'S IN TROUBLE."

I've got a letter, parson, from my son away out west.

An' my ol' heart is heavy as an anvil in my breast.

To think the boy whose future I had once so proudly planned

Should wander from the path o' right an' come to such an end.

I told him when he left us, only three short years ago,

He'd find himself a-plowin' in a mighty crooked row;

He'd miss his father's counsel an' his mother's prayers too;

But he said the farm was miferful, an' he guessed he'd have to go.

His letters came so seldom that I somehow sort o' knowed

That Billy was a-trampin' on a mighty rock road.

But never once imagined he would bow my head in shame,

An' in the dust he'd waller his ol' daddy's honored name.

He writes from out in Denver, an' the story's mighty short;

I just can't tell his mother; it'd crush her poor ol' heart;

An' so I reconed, parson, you might break the news to her—

Bill's in the legislatur, but he doesn't say what fur.

Tired

"I was weak and run-down," relates Mrs. Eula Burnett, of Dalton, Ga. "I was thin and just felt tired, all the time. I didn't rest well. I wasn't ever hungry. I knew, by this, I needed a tonic, and as there is none better than—

CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

"I began using Cardui," continues Mrs. Burnett, "after my first bottle, I slept better and ate better. I took four bottles. Now I'm well, feel just fine, eat and sleep, my skin is clear and I have gained and sure feel that Cardui is the best tonic ever made."

Thousands of other women have found Cardui just as Mrs. Burnett did. It should help you.

At all druggists.

HOMELY PHILOSOPHY FOR 1922

Fame is a wonderful thing. Think of the bird that first conceived the notion of starting a fire to keep warm before there was any fire. You know his name, of course. Then there was the boy who really owns all the gold in the world, the fellow who looked at a mountain, saw there was some stone in it, dug up the stone, saw there was metal in the stone and figured out how to get the metal out of the stone. You remember who he was, too. And the other boy, what's his name—the chap that fixed out words that carried meaning, and spoke them at the rest of the gang so they could all converse? Everybody knows who he was. There's no use talkin'. It's very important to get your name in the paper an' get a reputation.

IMPORTANT BUSINESS.

Pa and Ma Watkins have a small general store on Main street in a very small town in Indiana. They live in a room back of their store, where Ma generally holds forth by herself when Pa is busy in the store. One evening about six o'clock burglars entered the store and worked quietly, efficiently and quickly. Pa put up his hands when told to "stick 'em up," and stood that way while the "rush" was on. Ma, all unconscious of the "stunt" going on out in front, set the supper on the table and called Pa. He didn't move or utter a sound, and the burglars were too busy to care; but when Ma called a second time and commanded: "Pa, come here immediately," Pa broke his silence and meekly called back: "I can't come now ma; I'm busy."—Indianapolis News.

THE OLDEST LIVING THING.

The oldest living thing in the world is thought to be the famous cypress in the churchyard of the Village of Santa
